

with this piece , there at first wasnt any plans ahead , but as i started to make and put everything together i realised that I wanted to represent mental health in a way but that didn't work out in my favour. I wouldn't know if the last few seconds of the clip were somewhat likely relevant to the other two since it also felt random.
But if I were to break it down in full detail , it would be that somewhere, someone out there who has thought of the idea of death or even has gone to the extent of commitment and has survived is deemed to be immortal , since they are once again living and recreating their lives for the better , and are still strong and standing even after what has occurred to them. The characters would represent maybe imagination , imagination of the mind on how it plays tricks on people , something as innocent as Chibi characters getting chased would also be deemed demonic in a way , behind closed doors they are just characters but what if these characters are being chased by something far worse? Perhaps running away together with the person into the same horizon?
Which is why I added the type " chaos " at the end as a reminder that chaos can be seen even in the more simplest things.